

Donna M. Qualters, Ph.D.

Donna Qualters is currently Director of the Center Teaching Effectiveness (CTE) at Suffolk University, and associate professor of Education and Human Services. Donna has also been involved in faculty development, assessment, teaching/learning and student support as the Director of the Center for Effective University Teaching at Northeastern University, Director of Educational Initiatives and senior lecturer at MIT, Director of Faculty Development at UMass Medical School, Dean of Instruction and Professor at Endicott College Donna also serves as accreditor for the New England Association of Schools and Colleges (NEASC) specializing in the area of outcome assessment.

Her research centers on creating educational change and she has published and presented in the area of assessment, pedagogy, teacher identity/change, culture transformation, reflective practice and interdisciplinary ethical inquiry. Her book, Jonas Chalk, is an innovative interdisciplinary approach to changing teaching culture. She is also editor of the forthcoming book from Jossey-Bass, New Directions in Experiential Education.

Donna has been honored by the Professional Organization and Development Network in higher education (POD) for innovation in promoting faculty and instructional development on her campus. She is also on the Executive Board of the Massachusetts American Council of Education Women Leaders in Higher Education.