

Kristen Simonelli is the Associate Director and Service-Learning Coordinator in Northeastern University's Center of Community Service. Within her role, she promotes and supports the use of service-learning within the curriculum as well as the broad goal to institutionalize Service-Learning within the Institution. She is also the co-chair and founder of Northeastern's Service-Learning Advisory Board, member of the Martha's Vineyard Summer Institute on Experiential Education, and the Massachusetts Campus Compacts Community Service and Service-Learning Directors Think Tank. In addition to her work coordinating the S-L program, Kristen has utilized Service-Learning in her own teaching, and presented on implementation strategies at conferences for, such as, WACE (World Association of Cooperative Education) and The New England Faculty Development Consortium.

Kristen first came to the Center as a *VISTA (Volunteer In Service To America) through the Massachusetts Campus Compact (MACC) AmeriCorps program prior to being hired into her full-time role. Kristen received her B.A. in Public and Community Service Studies from Providence College's Feinstein Institute for Public Service where the foundation of her work with Service-Learning was established. She also received her M.S. in Applied Psychology, with a concentration in Student Development and Counseling, from Northeastern University's Bouve College of Health Sciences.
